

When you are writing you also need to consider your writing targets. This is an example for the picture above.

The beautiful, big, blue planet shines brightly in the night sky. As I look from bedroom window, I'm mesmerised by how large it is and how much it glistens under the stars.

I can see, what I think are its moons, they are much smaller, but they float around the edge of the planet, hovering like birds when they watch their prey.

There are many shades of blue that I can see, however there are also some pink and orange colours in the distance that look like the sun has set slowly as the day has passed.

Quietly, I sit and watch the trees swaying swiftly in the breeze that sit in front of this humongous sphere. The trees with few leaves look so small and delicate in front of this amazing planet. There are birds flying around squawking loudly because they aim to alert others about some form of danger. It's hard to tell from where I am sat, although as the colours move and change on this mysterious thing, it certainly has an eerie feel about it, like something exciting is about to happen.

Power of three (with commas separating the adjectives)

Alliteration

Adverb (ly word)

With phrase (for added detail)

Contraction

Simile

Conjunction (and, or, but, so, however, although, because)